WHEREAS, the act of learning to speak comes effortlessly to most children, however, those with apraxia require early, appropriate and intensive speech therapy, often for many years, to learn to speak; and

WHEREAS, without appropriate speech therapy intervention, children with apraxia will have diminished communication skills and are at high risk for secondary impacts in reading, writing, spelling and other school-related skills; and

WHEREAS, such primary and secondary impacts may diminish future independence, affect employment opportunities and challenge the ability to become productive, contributing citizens if not resolved or alleviated; and

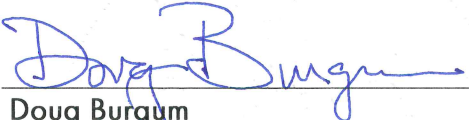

WHEREAS, it is important to provide adequate speech therapy and other services so the impact of this disorder can be minimized, and with early interventions and appropriate speech therapy, most children with CAS will learn to communicate with their own voices; and
